At the end of next week, just about everything should fall into place (it's going surprising well so far). You could then fairly confidently share (perhaps in a telephone conversation) the schedule with the Mayor. When the Mayor asks tomorrow if you will share the schedule with him, you could respond:

I will share the schedule with you as soon as I receive it. I caution against releasing such an aggressive schedule to the public; there is risk of slippage that would not be well received.

The Mayor will probably announce the schedule to the public right away, but we'll know at that time that the risk of slippage is remote. We can discuss this point and others tomorrow at your convenience. Carl

OK. I will await your answer on that one. -P

Here (below) are some possible talking points for your meeting with the Mayor; we can discuss at your convenience. Carl

- Available data suggest that we will be able to go directly to a final impact statement and avoid supplementation; if the data hold up, a letter to this effect should be transmitted to you shortly

- FAA has advised me that it will cooperate fully in expediting completion of the environmental process

- Staff is in the process of preparing a schedule for completion of the environmental process under a couple of different scenarios; I have requested the tightest schedule possible, consistent with lawful requirements

- I expect that adhering to either schedule will require some sacrifice—intensive effort—on the part of everybody, including members of your team, the consultants and others

- We may have to ask some players to accelerate their review or approval of aspects of the process in order to remain on schedule.

I haven't yet figured out how you might respond when the Mayor asks if you will share the schedule with him, but I'm working on it...

Great. Thanks. The Mayor is coming in tomorrow. We should talk before hand about what you are comfortable with me saying about the schedule. -P

We are fleshing out the schedule. Unless you object, we will have to call Toru for the purpose of directing the City's consultants to revise certain portions of the document. Toru will not be contacted until the letter advising the Mayor that we intend to go directly to a final impact statement has been sent. We will not mention anything about the schedule. No problems thus far. Carl
